“People in Wisconsin face increased stress from medical debt due, in part, to the political sabotage of the Affordable Care Act (ACA) by the Trump administration. Moreover, many patients lack support to confront the ever-changing program rules, red tape, and surprise medical bills that combine to create health insurance and health care barriers,” says Bobby Peterson, Public Interest Attorney of ABC for Health, Inc. Peterson continues, “Bad debt numbers are moving in the wrong direction from the reductions of 2013-15, when the ACA coverage expansions dramatically reduced uncompensated care in Wisconsin. Sadly, due to myopic policy decisions from Washington and our own state capitol from 2015-18, more people lack medical coverage for needed care.” Peterson says, “Bad debt and uncompensated care expenses hurt the bottom line for patients and hospitals, especially people affected by health disparities.” Peterson continues, “Patients overwhelmed by illness or the expense of treatment get lost in the health care bureaucracy and lose or fail to secure needed insurance and incur medical debts that could be avoided.”

Peterson concludes, “Using a successful national strategy adopted in both red and blue states, Wisconsin can reverse this trend on rising bad debt and help reduce the number of un- and underinsured Wisconsinites – many of whom are children - by expanding Medicaid for BadgerCare Plus. We need to create programs and policies that promote seamless and comprehensive health care coverage and care that includes strong consumer protections.”
